The boundaries between styles of music have begun to break down. Jazz and improvised music and music from earlier historical periods—all of these used to be in separate compartments. Now there's a lot more fluidity between them. Cecil Lytle, a musical wizard as far as I'm concerned, has never let a genre boundary stand in his way. Our season-opener offers an extraordinary arc of activity—from a new concert work to a classic that evokes jazz to jazz tunes by one of the American masters.
